TRUMP DISMISSES BIDEN'S CLAIM THAT PUTIN IS A BETTER DICTATOR

President Trump insisted that he loves freedom, but is definitely a better dictator.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE (The Blunt Ogre)—During the final Presidential debate on Thursday night, former VP Joe Biden suggested that President Trump could not be an effective dictator. Trump quickly retorted by saying, "Not true, I mean, I believe in Freedom and I love American freedom, nobody is more of a champion of American freedom than I am, I mean I'm the guy that's always said nobody is better than America, especially when it comes to freedom, because freedom and America are, you know, the same really, I mean really we're the same, one in the same, America and freedom, and American freedom is, really, one in the same and one and the same, we're both, it's best kind of freedom out there, other people think that they have freedom but once they experience American freedom they realize that 'woah! I never knew what freedom actually was!' but you know I'm not a dictator, but if I was, I would be a far better dictator than Vladimir Putin, no doubt, I'd be a world-class dictator, the best," Trump stated during the debate on Thursday night, however, no one in the audience could hear him because his microphone was muted.

SNOWDEN PHONES IN MAIL-IN BALLOT FOR BIDEN

The Trump campaign cites a recent lawsuit against Ed Snowden as the reason for the turnout turning against them .

MOSCOW (The Blunt Ogre)—While previously it was believed that he was a Trump sympathizer, sources in Russia have confirmed that Edward Snowden indeed called in his mail-in ballot for Joe Biden, using a hacked smartphone and a phony IP address. In response, Trump said that he will no longer pardon Snowden, and that his vote "shouldn't count."

NEW REVELATIONS FROM JULIAN ASSANGE EMBASSY CAT

New information describes a tense situation between Julian Assange and his feline associate.

LONDON (The Blunt Ogre)—According to new sources, Julian Assange and his Cat, who lived alongside Assange during his nearly 7 years of confinement in the Ecuadorian Embassy in London, shared close quarters and slept in the same bed, however, according to new information, the two apparently shared the same litter box as well. These new reports further claim that the relationship between Assange and the Cat was largely a public relations stunt, designed to promote Assange’s agenda and that there was a lot of tension between Assange and the Cat. Sources further confirm that the Ecuadorian government’s decision to end the asylum agreement for Assange was based entirely on the Cat’s grievances. Assange again made headlines during the 2016 U.S. election for his part in the Hillary Clinton e-mail scandal, and it was previously reported that he and his cat, known as Embassy Cat, experienced a falling out. The feud between Assange and the cat apparently began in late 2016, when sources say that Assange refused to provide the cat with slim-fitting ties, as Assange argued that the chunky ties were cute, however, the cat was adamant that the ties didn’t work with his feline body type. The cat had further requested cufflinks to match his collar studs, however, Assange refused, stating that “cufflinks were for capitalists and elitists.” Sources also have said that the Cat was lonely, and had expressed to Assange that he wanted to open a Tinder account. Assange apparently responded to the request by having the Cat’s testicles removed. Sources inside the embassy say that tensions were further fueled by a disagreement over social media accounts, as the Cat had reportedly pleaded with Assange to relinquish control of the Twitter and Instagram accounts that were under the cat’s moniker, Embassy Cat. The socially starved feline argued that in cat years, he was old enough to manage his own social media presence. Witnesses to the argument also said that the Cat complained about his baby pictures being on Twitter, saying that they were outdated, and further expressed frustration that his Instagram image was doing little to promote his dream of being a professional mouser. As the situation continued to escalate, the cat reportedly met in secret with Ecuadorian Ambassador Carlos Abad Ortiz on at least one occasion, and reportedly also met separately with several key members of Ortiz’s staff. Sources claim that the topic of these meetings was an ongoing battle that had been raging between Assange and the Cat, regarding the litterbox. Apparently, Assange had been demanding that the cat clean up after itself, and had actually resorted to smearing his own feces on the walls in an act of defiance for the Cat refusing to do so. The Cat believed that cleaning the litterbox was entirely the responsibility of Assange, since he was the only one that had opposable thumbs. Ecuadorian President Lenín Moreno apparently agreed with the Cat and stated publically that Assange had to be responsible for the feline’s “well-being, food, hygiene, and proper care.” The matter came to a head in late March of 2019 when Assange reportedly learned of the prior meetings between the cat and embassy officials. Fearful of retaliation from Assange, the cat requested to be removed from the embassy immediately and requested full immunity in exchange for his testimony against Assange. According to sources, the Cat claimed that Assange had been working to undermine the Ecuadorian government from inside the embassy, and he further complained that Assange blamed the Cat for not winning enough people over to his cause of evading rape charges. Days before the cat left the embassy, witnesses reported hearing the Cat saying to Assange, “you may be the only one with testicles, but I’m the only one in this room with any fucking balls.”
